He illustrated and emphasized his work with excellent material as outlined in the varied and widely divergent character parts performed; the Italian, the Italian, the cold-blooded cut-throat, and the bold, cool person of a football game. At times he had the audience breathless, while at other times there was an uncontrollable laughter, and in the scenes where no protracted time was given to the action, the aged man being tried for an old offense, there were tears on many cheeks.

The effectiveness of his work showed that he is a master at reaching the human emotions. The most dramatic piece of work was his makeup as a cowboy, and his reading of Stephen Foster's "Gone with the Wind" without the cowboy dialect not well known in the south, yet the impressiveness of Mr. Ratto's work in this selection was by every person in the audience.

The thing which announced the distance war Mr. Ratto's gait, and evidently Frank knew that the succeeding days of the Chautauqua will be better and better. He told everyone to be sure and see Mr. Ratto Saturday afternoon. All the same, we wish we could keep Mr. Ratto here for days and days, and every day we feel sure that the world is the better for his visit to the Chautauqua.

He is a great man, and his voice is the greatest gift he has.

His is the most dramatic and eloquent tenor voice I have ever heard. All ticket holders to be just a little ahead of time for such entertainment so that all may be seated without annoying others.

ANNA LITTLE

THE UNOPENED LETTER

By Bill Milford, released April 24.

Anna Little, famous for her portrayal of the popular western girl type, has resigned from the New York Motion Picture Corporation's players and announced companies to appear exclusively as a Universal star. She has to her credit years of legitimate and stock experience, and outside of her portrayal of the Indian and cow-girl roles, which made her famous, she has shown her versatility and versatility in many diversified characters.

"Her Fighting Chance," the "Flying A" two part release of April 24, offers an unusually novel and interesting subject, with a deep human interest.

"The Devil's Trap" (Circle) — An ex-posure of the traps in marriage, human, animal and the like, placed in the form of a drama, which is sure to

"Home Sweet Home," John Howard Payne's immortal song, is to be retold by the first all star cast ever assembled for a motion picture production. Harry E. Aitken, president of the Mutual Film Corporation of New York, conceived the idea.

"Rousseau's Adelicia," with Edward Ames, is now on the screen, based on a true last production.

Ken Beach's "The Spoilers" was selected to be the opening attraction at the new Strand Theatre, New York city, the largest moving picture theater in America, for an indefinite time. It consists of nine reels divided into three acts with a prologue. It is the work of the Selig company.
